10:45 'Proactive resilience': how procurement anticipates geopolitical crises

 PANEL
DISCUSSION

In a world where trade conflicts, political instability and supply bottlenecks are the new reality, reactive risk minimisation is no longer enough. What is needed is proactive resilience - and therefore procurement that not only monitors geopolitical developments, but also anticipates and strategically prepares for them at an early stage. In this panel, leading procurement managers will discuss how to set up early warning systems, model scenarios and make their organisations more resilient - technologically, structurally and culturally. What does it take to turn resilience from a buzzword into a real management task? How can supply chains be kept stable and adaptable despite global uncertainties? And how do procurement, risk management and top management work together today to be prepared for the unexpected?

A panel with practical strategies, honest lessons learnt and a clear view of what can - and will - come.

 PANEL DISCUSSION

Artificial intelligence, blockchain, autonomous systems: Purchasing is facing radical change. But what is vision, what is already reality - and what is really changing the game? In this panel, industry experts give a trenchant preview of the next five years in procurement. We will discuss how AI is changing procurement negotiations, how smart tools are creating real added value - and where humanity remains irreplaceable. A realistic look at trends, tools and tipping points, beyond the buzzword bingo - for all those who not only want to accompany change, but also shape it.

15:30 Excel is not ERP!" - Why data-driven procurement remains so difficult

Everyone is talking about data - but procurement is often still stuck in the Excel trap. Why is the leap from pure data collection to genuine decision-making intelligence so rare? This panel sheds light on the challenges on the way to data-driven procurement: from outdated systems and a lack of integration to culture and processes. And above all: what does it take for procurement analytics, robotic process automation and data lakes to finally turn procurement into a strategic sparring partner and driver of innovation? An honest and practical deep dive into the data-driven future of procurement.

PANEL
DISCUSSION

16:15 Procurement in transition: How much tool diversity can procurement tolerate?

Digital procurement is at a crossroads: centralised platforms, modular best-of-breed solutions or in-house developments? Many companies are currently overhauling their tool landscapes - in parallel to migrating to new ERP systems or by introducing specialised procurement applications. But how can the strategic reorganisation succeed without falling into the complexity trap? In this panel, procurement managers will discuss architecture decisions, governance issues and how much standardisation and flexibility procurement really needs today. The panellists will also report openly on their own developments, restructuring and lessons learned in practice.

 FIRESIDE CHAT

17:45 AI does not negotiate - or does it?

When algorithms meet algorithms: Do humans still negotiate at all? Two purchasing managers, two perspectives, one common challenge: In a world where AI-based systems increasingly prepare or even make decisions, the question arises as to whether negotiation is still a core human competence - or whether it is being shifted from machine to machine. In a fireside chat, experienced practitioners discuss how negotiations are changing in the digital age, where humans remain irreplaceable - and when we may only be spectators when AI negotiates with AI.

PANEL
DISCUSSION

10:45 Global green governance: sustainability is the responsibility of top management

The decisive panel for all those who do not want to leave the future to chance. Three international voices from the heart of the sustainability movement - on one stage, united by a common question: How do we concretely and jointly shape a future worth living for our planet? In a changing world, we don't need empty promises, but vision, courage and action. This panel is not a discussion - it is a wake-up call. Experience exclusively how global game changers talk about the next big steps in climate, justice and innovation. Real insights. Clear words. Global responsibility. Whether politics, business or society - what is said here is heard. And what is decided here influences the world of tomorrow.

11:30 How much does your profit cost?

The soil plundered, the water contaminated, society disoriented. How much luxury can the climate afford, and when will the gap between rich and poor also divide our democracy? How we can overcome systemic blockages and achieve a good life despite collapsing hope and ecology.

DISCUSSION

13:30 The end of the one-way street - how linear thinking becomes circular transformation

The transition to a circular economy affects every company - regardless of industry, size or business model. This panel brings together sustainability managers and strategic decision-makers from leading companies who are actively shaping the transition from linear value creation to the circular economy. Practical levers will be discussed - from technology and supply chains to product design, internal governance and cultural change. In focus: How can the circular economy be anchored not just as an environmental goal, but as an integral part of a sustainable corporate strategy?

15:30 Industries in transition: sustainability between pressure, disruption and implementation

Three industries - three voices - three challenges.

In a series of consecutive Fireside Chats, leading sustainability experts from the mobility, construction and energy sectors will each talk for 20 minutes about a hot topic from their industry - directly, honestly and practically.

After each discussion, the current guest leaves the stage and the next expert takes their place.

A continuous flow of dialogue across sector boundaries - with a focus on transferability and inspiration for sustainability managers from the DACH region.

SUSTAINABILITY SUMMIT MAIN STAGE 17:15 Reporting, regulation, reality - how sustainability managers navigate between transparency obligations and implementation
Regulatory requirements such as CSRD, ESRS and the EU taxonomy are fundamentally changing the rules of the game in sustainability communication. However, disclosure alone does not automatically lead to real transformation - many sustainability managers are caught between reporting obligations, strategic aspirations and operational feasibility.
In this panel, five sustainability managers discuss how they deal with the increasing pressure for transparency, which processes and structures they implement - and where they draw the line between regulatory obligation and strategic opportunity.
